The Community Medicine Fellow in Family Medicine at the Los Angeles Medical Center will:

- Work in a variety of safety net clinical settings, including school-based care, mobile clinics for the homeless, and well-established federally qualified health centers
- Gain significant experience in care of homeless patients
- Work at unique clinic sites such as a male STD clinic and high school-based clinics
- Work with a very diverse patient population at the different clinical sites
- Gain extensive experience teaching students and residents
- Gain extensive experience in poverty medicine with a diverse patient population
- Work with a well-established Family Medicine Residency Program to help guide and teach their community medicine curriculum
- Work on a community-based health project: past (and current) projects have included training community health educators and working to improve access to care for immigrants
